

The Derbyshire Strategy is about integrating creativity into the experience of learning and teaching. This means identifying what we already do well and doing more of it, and developing new approaches to education for children and younger adults.

Creativity is a process that inspires and maximises learning. It offers a tool for young people to conceptualise how the world could be different for themselves and society at large, with the inner confidence to make it happen.

Generating Creative Enterprise

Generating Creative Enterprise
Creative thinking is vital to keep pace in a world of change. In Derbyshire our task is to prepare the next generation to face social, personal, and economic developments with confidence and ability. Ideas drive society forward, and through creativity, teachers can equip students with the ability to develop, criticise, and implement their thinking, both individually and collectively.

Promoting Creative Learning

Promoting Creative Learning

What if you could create an environment in which it is impossible not to learn?

How can you recognise when it's time to step outside your familiar repertoire of teaching strategies and do something new?

Teaching creatively and learning to be creative are essential elements of the Derbyshire Strategy for Creativity.

Working with Creative Partners
Enabling creative practitioners to work with schools is good for everyone involved. It allows creative professionals to interact and engage with pupils, inspiring learning, bringing innovative approaches to teaching and raising achievement.

Leading for Creativity

Leading for Creativity

Creative leadership is about finding ways to inspire individuals to become active members of a team. The Derbyshire Strategy for Creativity will enable us to think differently about the purposes and organisation of education and implement new ways to achieve them.
