HEALTH AND WELLBEING BOARD ROUND-UP REPORT

1. Purpose of the report

To provide the Board with a round-up of key progress in relation to Health and Wellbeing issues and projects not covered elsewhere on the agenda.

2. Round-Up

NHS Five Year Forward View into action

NHS England (NHSE) has published a two-year review and update on the progress of the implementation of the NHS Five Year Forward View. The new guidance provides information about how local areas should implement the vision outlined in the Forward View through NHS Sustainability and Transformation Plans (STPs).

Young people's well-being 2017

The Office for National Statistics has published data which examines progress against a set of well-being indicators for young people (aged 16 to 24) in the UK including health, environment, personal finances and crime. Key points include:

- Several aspects of young people's quality of life and well-being have improved in this latest update; many of these relate to education, employment and skills, while some measures of how young people feel about their lives provide a more mixed picture.
- Overall satisfaction with health has improved and the gap between young men's and young women's satisfaction with their health has narrowed.
- In 2016, the proportions of young people who were unemployed or not in education, employment or training (NEET) both reached their lowest levels since the most recent economic downturn.
- The proportion of young people reporting that they find it difficult to get by financially decreased to 7% in the period 2014 to 2015 from 15% in 2009 to 2010 but the proportion of young people living in households at risk of poverty increased from 19% in 2008 to 25% in 2015.
- The proportion of young people reporting symptoms of anxiety or depression increased from 18% in the period 2009 to 2010 to 21% in 2013 to 2014; young women were more likely than young men to report symptoms of anxiety or depression.

- On social connections, the proportion of young people who said they had someone to rely a lot on, decreased from 80% in the period 2010 to 2011 to 76% in 2013 to 2014 but the proportion of young people who agreed or strongly agreed that they belong to their neighbourhood, increased from 50% in 2009 to 2010 to 57% in 2014 to 2015

Mobilising communities: insights on community action for health and wellbeing

Nesta has published a report which looks at 'Mobilising Communities' a short, experimental programme aimed at exploring the practical applications of the idea of 'social movements' in health in three communities in England. The objective of the programme was to work with the sites to explore the opportunities to support effective ways of combining people power and community resources, together with publicly funded services, for better health outcomes across local communities.

What does improving population health really mean?

The Kings Fund has published an article which describes population health and asks what improving population health really means. The article outlines how collaboration with local government is particularly important, given local government's responsibility for public health spending and a wider range of services that influence people's health. Priority areas for public health spending include giving every child the best start in life, helping people find good jobs and stay in work, and ensuring that people live in warm and safe homes.

Social prescribing: less rhetoric and more reality: a systematic review of the evidence

The University of York Centre for Reviews and Dissemination has published a report which assesses the effectiveness of social prescribing programmes relevant to the NHS setting. The report concludes that although social prescribing is being advocated as a method of linking patients in primary care with sources of support within the community to help improve their health and well-being, current evidence fails to provide sufficient detail to judge either success or value for money.

Health and housing: building evidence base

Kent Surrey Sussex Academic Health Science Network has published a report which reviews the evidence from projects and pilot initiatives which bring together health and housing, with a particular focus on older people. The report suggests that closer working between the NHS and the housing sector can help reduce hospital admissions and emergency department visits, speed up the discharge of older patients and maintain the independence of older people.

Keep active' to stay sharp in later life

Age UK has launched 'Staying Sharp' a new online hub on brain ageing, which has been developed in collaboration with the Centre for Cognitive Ageing and Cognitive Epidemiology (CCACE) and reveals what might help people to protect their thinking skills as they get older. The information finds that approximately three quarters of the changes in our thinking skills across our lives are down to lifestyle and environmental factors, with many of these being things we can control or change.

Measuring national well-being: life in the UK

The Office for National Statistics has released an assessment of UK progress against a set of headline national well-being indicators, which include health, natural environment, personal finances and crime. Change over time is also assessed to establish whether national well-being is improving or deteriorating. Key points include:

- The latest update provides a broadly positive picture of life in the UK, with the majority of indicators either improving or staying the same over the 1 year period.
- Considering the 43 national well-being indicators, 15 improved, 18 stayed the same and 2 deteriorated, compared with 1 year earlier.
- Satisfaction with jobs, health, and leisure time all showed improvements on a 1-year and 3-year basis.
- Fewer people reported their anxiety as very low between the years ending September 2015 and 2016.
- On environmental sustainability, the proportion of waste from households that was recycled fell over a 1-year period, while remaining unchanged over the 3-year period.

Quality of care in the NHS

The Health Foundation has published Quality of care in the NHS – in the balance. This briefing provides a high level view of how the quality of some NHS services has changed over the past few years in England. The four aspects of quality covered are waiting times for hospital treatment; care for patients with diabetes; psychological therapy for common health conditions; and speed and use of the most effective best-practice treatments.

Mental health and integrated care

The NHS Confederation Mental Health Network has published Mental health and community providers: lessons for integrated care. This briefing looks at how mental health and community provider organisations are exploring the multi-speciality provider model and how it can drive the delivery of integrated mental and physical healthcare. The briefing presents key points and lessons learned.

Living with dementia

The Alzheimer's Society has published Turning up the volume: unheard voices of people with dementia. This report brings together views of more than 3,500 people with dementia, carers and the public on what it is like to live with dementia. The information is taken from a series of in-depth interviews and face-to-face and online surveys. It provides an insight into the gap between the things that people living with dementia need to live well and their day-to-day reality.

Child health and STPs

The Royal College of Pediatrics and Child Health has published State of Child Health short report series: sustainability and transformation partnerships. The RCPCH has undertaken a review of Sustainability and Transformation Plans from a child health perspective. The report finds that while most STPs set out the case for change well and cover important key themes such as prevention, early intervention, more care delivered in the community, better mental health services and integrated working, there is a lack of detail underpinning the vision. It concludes that the lack of profile given to infants, children and young people by the majority of STPs is a cause for concern.

Mental health and new care models

The Kings Fund in partnership with the Royal College of Psychiatrists has published Mental health and new care models: lessons from the vanguards. This report based on recent research found that where new models of care have been used to remove the barriers between mental health and other parts of the health system, local professionals saw this as being highly valuable in improving care for patients and service users. However, there remains much to be done to fully embed mental health into integrated care teams, primary care, urgent and emergency care pathways, and in work on population health.

A sustainable workforce

The Health Foundation has published A sustainable workforce: the lifeblood of the NHS and social care. This briefing provides a focus on the NHS and social care finances and calls for an independent financial body for the NHS to be established, similar to the Office of Budget Responsibility (OBR).

Social media and mental health wellbeing

The Royal Society of Public Health and the Young Health Movement have published #StatusOfMind, examining the positive and negative effects of social media on young people's health. The report includes a league table of social media platforms according to their impact on young people's mental health. YouTube tops the table as the most positive with Instagram and Snapchat coming out as the most detrimental to young people's mental health and wellbeing.

Technology-enabled housing

ADASS' Housing Policy Network has launched a new web resource that explains how commissioners can help patients to live better lives at home by utilising new technology. The resource has been supported by the LGA and the Housing Learning and Improvement Network.

Talking about cancer

Cancer Research UK is offering a free online cancer awareness training Talking about cancer. This course aims to separate myths from facts and encourage healthy lifestyle changes and spotting cancer early.

Health visiting and school nursing services

The Royal College of Nursing has published The Best Start: the future of children's health: valuing school nurses and health visitors in England. This report shows that there has been a decline in the number of school nurses and an emerging trend of reductions in the health visiting workforce. It outlines the context to the changes being made to these services, and to the workforce.

A Teaching Care Home pilot

This series of reports evaluates a Department of Health funded pilot which aimed to empower the workforce in care home nursing and to ensure the future sustainability of the workforce in the sector. The pilot created five centres of excellence across England which would share learning and best practice and help to strengthen leadership and care culture in care homes.

Social Capital in the UK

The Office of National Statistics have published the latest national statistics on social capital. The most recent data show a largely positive picture of social capital in the UK over the longer-term with over half of the indicators showing improvement over a period of 3 years; a majority of indicators showed improvement or no overall change over the shorter-term 1 year assessment. Most adults in the UK have at least one close friend, rising from 95% in 2011 to 2012 to 97% in 2014 to 2015. However, there has been a fall in the proportion of people saying they have someone to rely on a lot in case of a serious problem; this figure fell from 86% in 2010 to 2011 to 84% in 2013 to 2014. Over two-thirds of UK adults (68%) report stopping and talking to their neighbours in 2014 to 2015 and more people are engaging in unpaid volunteering; in 2010 to 2011 the figure was 17% compared with 19% in 2014 to 2015.

Use of the Social Value Act by CCGs

Social Enterprise UK in partnership with National Voices has published Healthy commissioning: how the Social Value Act is being used by clinical commissioning groups. Key findings in the report show that 43% of respondents had no policy on the Social Value Act; only 25 CCGs (13%) demonstrated 'highly committed, evidenced and active' use of the Act; weighting procurement for social value, even amongst the most highly committed CCGs, is limited and low; and analysis of Sustainability and Transformation Plans found that just 13% mention Social Value.

Social prescribing

The King's Fund has published presentations from a recent event Social prescribing: from rhetoric to reality. The event explored the range of benefits of social prescribing, as well as how best to measure and evaluate the impact and outcomes. Pioneering local areas shared their approach, challenges and achievements, and provided practical resources for commissioners and practitioners to develop schemes in their own locality.

Nurse registrations from the EU

New figures released by the Health Foundation have revealed a 96% drop in the number of nurses from the EU registering to practise in the UK since July last year. The figures were obtained from the Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) show that after a sharp decline from a high of 1,304 in July last year to 344 two months later in September, numbers have continued to fall, with just 46 EU nurse registrants in April 2017. The UK has repeatedly used international recruitment as a stop gap measure to fill staffing shortages, and since 2008 the majority of international nurses registering in the UK have come from within the EU. But the fall in EU registrants suggests that a more sustainable long-term approach to workforce planning is urgently needed.
